Contacting MMAL Warranty department

A number of feedback forums (Service Managers meetings, NDC meetings, training sessions etc.) have suggested that dealer staff have difficulty contacting MMAL warranty staff. This is not strictly accurate.

Early after our new system Go-Live the warranty department was inundated with emails and calls to such an extent that we had over 500 outstanding emails to answer. These were cleared by the end of July (by suspending other duties and working weekends) and since then there have been on average 30 emails outstanding overnight, all of which had been received that day and most from WA due to the time zone difference. Except for a short period in late September, where we had staffing issues, all emails have been answered well within 24 hours.

Email is the preferred contact method and has several advantages:

1. We can answer queries in the order that they are received to be fair to all.
2. Critical information can be "cut and pasted" from the email to the MMAL systems to investigate the claims.
3. Screenshots can be supplied so that the MMAL Warranty Analysts can fully understand the issue.
4. The Warranty Analysts can work through the whole query without interruption.
5. Performance can be monitored by MMAL Warranty management to ensure that dealer problems are being addressed correctly and counter measures put in place if they are not.
6. Written detail of issues can be gathered from the emails to gain intelligence on common issues so that these can be resolved or counter measures introduced in a more timely manner.
7. An audit trail exists in case of disputes.

MMAL Warranty will answer phone calls when they can but not to the detriment of clearing emails. Dealer staff can request a MMAL Warranty Analyst to call them in an email but this should only be for very complicated matters or when step by step instructions are required.

The MMAL warranty department is manned based on 40 to 50 emails a day, we currently receive over 120 per day, 5 days a week.
